The following remarks from Hon. Shelton Rights doctrine. We congratulate him upon its clear enunciation in the Halls of Congress: We have a remedy which we have a right necine war within the Union.

But she will do another thing. There is a peaceful remedy—ay, sir, a constitutional remedy. I scorn to stand on the ground that your Sewards occupy. I scorn to place the rights of Virginia on that higher law that has been preached at the other end of the Capitol, and that is also held and practiced at this end the Legislature of Alabama, Mr. Clayton, from the Military Committee, reported favorably on the Military Committee, reported favorably on from the Democratic benches.] Whenever the heavy hand of oppression is laid upon her, whenever she feels that the burdens of the Union more than counterbalance the benefits are about fifty-three counties in Alabama, and to result from it, she says to you, with that the whole number of military companies in quiet and dignity which become her proud and ancient renown, "I withdraw myself from inally, on that proud and elevated ground of pure, independent, undelegated sovereignty, which I never consented to divide with you.

"Let the Issue be Made."

Under this caption the Pennsylvanian, rue and reliable Democratic journal, reviews the treasonable conduct of the fanatics of the North, and says the great purposes of the Constitution have ceased to be desirable to a large portion of the people of the North. The Pennsylvanian recapitulates some of their acts, and says they can no longer be regarded as fanatics, enthusiasts, or madmen. They have naugurated a political power and ascendency in most of the Northern States. A large number of influential journals promulgate their views, and a still larger number silently approve their sentiments. Meetings are held not alone for a discussion of their peculiar peculiar views, but for the purpose of denouncing the Constitution, the laws and the Union. They not only affect to despise the compact which holds together the States of the conederacy, but have resisted the laws of Congress. They have done this with violence, and with arms, whereby citizens of the United States have been killed. Bodies of armed erritory for the avowed purpose of making it not pass. In view, therefore, of the open and active resistance to the laws of Congress—in view of the arming and sustaining of a body of men in a territory of the Union for the purpose of in a territory of the Union for the purpose of waging civil war—in view of the repetition of this purpose in a more general way in the Southern States—in view of the applause with which the late acts, in part execution of those plans, have been received, and the laudation of the murderer and the condemnation of the authorities of the State of Virginia, acting under the solemnity of the law—in view of the adoption of these acts by the political party called Republican, so far as can be judged by the journals of that party, and the support and protection of treasonable meetings by a Republican Mayor and Police—and, finally, in view of the general impunity for lawless and treasonable practices throughout the North, now under the sway of the Republican party, we most unhesitatingly say that the purposes of the Constitution have been violated and can no longer be maintained, either to perfect the Union or insure domestic tranquility.

Let the issue, then, be made. The opportunity tion and hostility to the Union, the laws, and the Constitution, of which we have spoken, commenced and has been fostered in the North. commenced and has been fostered in the North.

The South has been loyal, and can take care of herself; she is able to resist, expel, or punpreferable, separate and form a new govern-ment. But the North has within herself traitors, incendiaries, and promoters of riot and anarchy. More than this, she has within her-self those who hold as little allegiance to the Bihle and the Christian religion as they do the Constitution of the Union. The issue is then with the North. Shall the work of treason be allowed to proceed? Shall meetings be held in our midst wherein treason and murder are in our midst wherein treason and murder are openly and daringly taught, and the example of those who engage in them lauded and made noble for the emulation of our citizens? Shall public journals be printed in our midst, and circulated for the purpose of destroying the Government by creating a wide-spread disaffection and lawlessness among the people? Or shall the conservative, peaceful citizens of the N peaceful citizens of the North assemble to-gether, and by peaceable means, if possible, and if not, by a resort to arms, end this agita-tion, either by silencing the agitators forever, laws and a government more congenial to their purposes and sentiments?
